Inventive step (IS)	Claims 1-8	YES

Industrial applicability (IA)	Claims 1-8	YES

2. Citations and explanations (Rule 70.7)

Reference is made to the following document:

D1: CH 344 966.

Document D1, which is considered to be the prior art closest to the subject matter of claim 1, describes (the references between parentheses apply to said document):

- a corrector device for correcting information provided by an indicating mechanism (page 1, lines 51-64) in a timepiece that includes a box defining a space (figure 1), which corrector device includes a control lever (figures 2 and 5) located outside the box space and actuatable by a user (figures 2 and 5), and an actuation lever (figure 2, the lever portions located next to 15) located inside said box space (figure 2) and in engagement with the indicating mechanism (figure 1, 11) of which the information is to be corrected, wherein said control lever and said actuation lever are connected to one another by means of a rotary connecting member that is rotatable about a general axis of symmetry (the lever portion in figure 2 that connects the lever portions outside and inside the box is considered to be a "connecting member" and is rotatable about the axis of pin 6, which axis is a general axis of symmetry).

It follows that the subject matter of the claim differs from this known device in that:

- the control lever and the actuation lever are in two separate planes, with said control lever being embedded in a well provided in a horn on the casing.

The subject matter of claim 1 is, therefore, novel (PCT Article 33(2)).

The problem that the present invention is intended to solve can therefore be considered to be that of providing a timepiece corrector device that can be actuated simply without using a tool and with which there is no chance of inadvertent actuation.

The solution to this problem, as proposed in claim 1 of the present application, is considered to involve an inventive step (PCT Article 33(3)), for the following reasons:

- This combination of features is not known from, or suggested by, the prior art.

Claims 2-8 are dependent on claim 1 and, as such, therefore also fulfil the PCT requirements of novelty and inventive step.
